They Know Dangers Of Highway Speed

The consensus of the nation's highway traffic officials on what are the safest maximum driving speeds would appear to be a guide that others might adopt as their own.

Such a consensus has resulted from a survey which the Association of Casualty and Surety Companies recently conducted. It is interesting that vhile the traffic officials arrived at certain conlusions when they were thinking about speed stanards for the general public, they trimmed their naximums when it came to recording the top peed at which they themselves felt reasonably safe in an automobile.

In giving the speed maximums they favor for the public on the nation's best superhighways, the average official placed his figures at 65 miles an hour in daytime and 60 miles an hour at night. He would not go above 60 for daytime driving and 55 for night driving on the better state highways. For less ideal conditions he favored slower speeds still.

When it came to the top speed at which they personally felt "comfortably safe," they put it at not more than 60 miles an hour under any conditions, day or night. There was a strong indication of an inclination to name an even lower figure.

In setting standards for the general public, these traffic officials undoubtedly gave careful consideration to all technical factors involved. In giving the standards for their own personal driving they would seem to have been unconsciously influenced by man's normal desires to survive.

That's an instinct that too many others seem to lack when behind the wheel of an automobile.

When one lies on a hospital bed wondering whether you might not die overnight, it suddenly comes to him hat he has made no preparations for this one inevitable as having failed to see that "the ct in all his life.

Of course, the prudent man has left some insurance his family and maybe something of an estate, but en that lacks reality at such a moment. People somew manage to live and the lady who played great at 2 Colony or the Stork can sell hats and dresses as well the next one. There is no satisfaction in being a rich amine carefully the text of Washdow; there must be a richer memory than dollars.

And the question does bother the fellow who is waiting for the verdict, whether he has prepared his family to live without him by moral strength, determination to achieve. These little thoughts are bothersome for a while, just as the very material thought that comes along to make a restless night-does the wife know how to handle money? Does she know enough about my affairs to know what I owe and what will be coming to her?

The rich have lawyers and accountants for such lings but the rest of us are just plain people too sure ourselves and when what everybody believes can only appen to the other fellow happens to us, the arrangenents have generally not been made

And that brings me back to the family system which, be complete, consists of a father, a mother and chilren all united by love and by God's sacrament. In such family, there can be no secrets between husband and ife because secrets are unnecessary and unpleasant and and to suspicion and deceit. I have never been able to nderstand a marriage in which the husband and wife re really strangers to each other and remain strangers lthough they have children. They know nothing about gencies. ach other really, except that they are often in each ther's company. And sometimes when such a husband ies, the wife does not know where to get the money to ury him. She has never been privy to his affairs, receivng a weekly allowance as though she were an employe nd never really knowing whether he could or could not fford her expenditures. I find that such a relationship is more usual than one would expect.

There is another side to the preparation for departure from this particular life and that is that one does wonder whether religion is a myth and a fraud or whether there is a God and what has one done with his life. Prayer is a rich experience, but the person unaccustomed to prayer must have a hard time because he does not know what to say. The question of guilt must arise and it certainly plagued me for a few nights. It is always at night that the subconscious comes up with the forgotten errors.

I would have hated, during these weeks, to have had o bear the guilt of a broken home, with children driven ither and you by uncertainty and fear of life itself. I do ot think that the little sensual thrills of complex marlages would be at all helpful in the dark ruminations ver personal guilt, which no sedation can kill.

Guilt is not driven away by disbelief, not when death s around the corner and the doctor's face speaks more learly and finally than his words. It is then that one sks himself: "What have I done with this life that God as given me?" And there must be an answer because e subconscious will not be quiet. How happy is the rson who at such a moment turns his face to the eator and fears not His judgment! That does not mean at he is without faults. It does mean that he is withut fear.

No man who has been close to death-consciously close to death-can ever face life as before. That is really the significance of Eisenhower's coronary as it is of anybody's. He faces a new life as though he were reborn. Wife, children, friends, activities-all take on new relationships because their meaning in the whole picture of living is different.

For this is certain: the person who has come back life is not a self-made man, no matter what he was fore. He did not bring himself back. Nor are the ctors entirely responsible for restoring him because knows, what they know, that, in certain circumnces, there would have been no way back. The stroke ld have been final and complete. It comes to him as lies alone and no longer afraid that God's mercy has en upon him and that he owes more than he can pay. And that starts a chain of thinking that one annot ignore if one is at all sensitive to the forces in is own life.

Some cabinet members, such as Secretary of Agriculture Benson and Health Secretary Folsom, were noncommittal. The subject was somewhat outside their bailiwick. The only cabinet member who actually opposed a veto was Secretary McKay, who has consistently stood with the big utilities in his administration of the Inter-

Unfortunately, most of the critics who would be saying these things have never taken the time to exington's Farewell Address. Somehow, they don't give it as much attention throughout American schools in connection with Washington's birthday as they used to do. For these is nothing in the Farewell Address that opposes the principle behind an American membership in the League of Nations or in the United Nations. The first President of the United States, after eight years in office, gave his countrymen the following ad-took two forms.

Krushchev, moreover, took it upon himself to correct two basic Leninist theories - that war between the Capitalist and Communist states was inevitable, and that communism could only triumph through bloodshed and revolution. These theories were valid enough in Lenin's day, Krushchev said airily, but they were no longer true today

"My God," one student of Soviet matters remarked, "they've not only kicked Stalin in the shins, they've gone further, and patted Lenin on the head.

Really amazing, self-confidence is required for this sort of thing, in a society where a charge of ideological deviation is used like a dagger in the back. Krushchev and the lesser lights who followed him could not possibly have gone so far, unless they were genuinely unafraid of any internal challenge to their power On the other hand, the Soviet rulers were similarly self-assured about any external threat to the regime. Mikoyan struck the correct note when he boasted, almost in the same breath, of "our active, flexible foreign policy strained, calm in tone, without sharp words." and of the Soviet ability to deliver nuclear weapons "to any point on earth by aircraft or rockets.

Card of Thanks

We desire to extend our heartfelt thanks to all who aided and comforted us in our recent sad bereavement, the death of our beloved husband and step-father. of our beloved husband and step-father.

Ernest S. Richel. Especially do we thank the pallbearers, those who donated the use of their cars; those who sent floral offerings and the minister, Rev. LeRoy Imperio, for his comforting words.

Mrs. Ernest S. Richel and Family.

In Memoriam

In memory of Mrs. Anna Steele, who died Feb. 23, 1955.
Just a year ago you left us.
How we miss you day by day—
For when God took you to Heaven, We were left here in dismay: Left without a wife and mother, One who had a heart so true For when troubles were a burden, we could always turn to you. Husband, Daughter, Son and Daughter-in-law.

That was the basic idea in the remarks made last night by Henry A. Barnes, director of the Traffic Engineering Department of the City of Battimore, at a dinner meeting at the Cumberland Country Club.

Problems Cited

Speaking in plain language, Barnes told his audience of some 50 men, including city officials and most of the community's industrial and business leaders, that he could offer Cumberland no help if all wanted was to "enjoy poor health."
